William Tell

This is the story of William Tell, the national hero of Switzerland whose existence is disputed. According to the popular legend, Tell was a peasant who could defy authority. There was a very cruel ruler named Hermann Gessler whose soldiers arrested William and his son. Gessler knew Tell was an expert with the crossbow. For that reason, he forced Tell to shoot an apple on top of Tell's son's head. Tell was able to aim carefully and hit the apple without touching the boy. While the people were cheering, Gessler asked Tell to shoot a second arrow. Tell me, "this one is for you". Gessler got angry and decided to take Tell to his castle on the other side of Lake Lucerne. While they were crossing the lake, a storm started and Tell was able to escape. Later, when Gessler and his soldiers arrived at the castle, Tell was waiting for them. As they were walking along the path to the castle, Tell jumped out. With his crossbow and the second arrow, Tell could kill Gessler. However, there is no evidence of the existence of Tell, these events supposedly helped to encourage people to rise up against Austrian rule.
